Message from Chief Brent Smith

When criminals are arrested, the United States Constitution guarantees them over 20 individual rights. It is only fair that victims are also accorded rights, so the “Victims’ Bill of Rights Act of 2008,” also known as “Marsy’s Law,” provides victims with those rights to justice and due process.

Marsy’s Law was named after Marsalee Nicholas, a UC Santa Barbara student who was stalked and killed by her ex-boyfriend. A week after the murder, Marsy’s mother was confronted by the accused murderer. She did not know that he had been released on bail. The courts, at that time, had no obligation to let the family of a murder victim know of the release of the accused. The approval of Marsy’s Law changes this. Courts must take into consideration the safety of victims and family when setting bail and release conditions.

The officers of Ceres Police Department will enforce these rights for you, proactively pursuing all avenues that lead to a successful prosecution of the offender

Justice with compassion - that is my pledge to you
